

The Haunted Castle of Ursula de Fluff

by Petros Hatzopoulos

Copyright © 2004 Patakis Publishers, Greece
E-mail: foreignrights@patakis.gr

Ursula de Fluff is an old bunny, rich and famous, living in an old great castle in the forests of Scotland.

However, strange things have been happening in the castle over the past few months. The armors are squeaking and moving in the dark corridors, following Ursula's slightest movement. A pair of sinister red eyes appear in the attic, while during the night a chilling growl echoes through the castle. Furniture and statuettes, candles and books rise suddenly in the air and levitate, as if they were enchanted. And in the forest surrounding the castle an enormous wolf roams howling every night, terrifying the animals all around.

At the same time, anonymous letters have begun to appear on Ursula's front door, written by some unknown animal who is offering to buy the castle and rid her of its terrors. Desperate, the old bunny seeks for the help of an old friend of hers: the world famous squirrel detective, Cornelius Crick.

On the day he receives Ursula's letter, Cornelius departs, accompanied by his friend and trustworthy assistant, Martha the firefly. In the dusk they arrive at Ursula's castle, in a forest near Glasgow.

The rumors in the woods have been going on for quite a while. Everyone is talking of ghosts, creatures from beyond, and besides these possible dangers, Cornelius has to face the nuisance of Hortensia Nosy, an impossible weasel reporter, who has camped along with her TV crew outside Ursula's Haunted Castle, as she dabs it -casting a curious eye (and a curious shot) on everything that goes on.

However, Cornelius will not be intimidated by any bigmouth reporter nor by ghosts. For he believes that there's always a simple explanation hiding behind every mystery, and a series of coincidences, or dark plots behind every inexplicable phenomenon.

Just as he had promised, Cornelius begins his investigation the very night of their arrival. And wanting to get Martha, his assistant, off his back -she's complaining about their holiday, which they've just postponed, plus she's developed an unhealthy interest in the media following their steps- he also promises to solve this complicated mystery during the same night.

Will he manage to stand up to the challenges of the Supernatural?

And what is the truth hiding behind the mystery of the Haunted Castle of Ursula de Fluff?